The school commissioners have issued a printed statement to the citizens of Montpelier, asking for better school accommodations, showing that the crowded quarters now in use must be dispensed with. They also urge the citizens to attend the special meeting December 6, called for the purpose of seeing if the city will issue $100,000 bonds to erect a new building. The statement goes to show that ten years ago the school enrollment was 744; to-day it is 1013, a gain of 36 per cent. Ten years ago the enrollment of the high school was 108; now it is 182, an increase of 74, or 68 per cent. Here the overcrowding is most noticeable, there being 180 pupils and desks for only 140 at the opening of the fall term. To remedy the difficulty, the basement of the Baptist church was leased, one of the grades sent there and the senior class of the high school was assigned to the room left vacant by the grade. This and other questions led the committee to urge some action that will permit of better teaching facilities for the young people of the capital city.

Where Surgery Fails

Cutting Won't Remove the Cause of Piles.

Piles mean more than merely the pain of the stubborn little tumors. There is a condition inside that must be dealt with. Cutting is usually followed with later and worse attacks. A permanent cure can only be made by bettering the condition of the parts and getting a free circulation of the blood.

Hem-Roid cures all kinds of piles by internal action right on the cause. Sold by Burt H. Wells, Barre, Vt., and money back if it fails. $1 per bottle. Dr. Leonhardt, Station B, Buffalo, N. Y.

A TRIBUTE TO VERMONT

And Praise for the Burns Monument in Barre.

Editor, Barre Times, Sir: It gave me a good deal of pleasure recently to read an article in The New York Scottish-American, under the heading, "A Scot Among the Vermont Hills," and thinking that many of our Scottish readers would enjoy its perusal I copy a few extracts which I consider quite interesting and made me feel that I would love to have a ramble through the lovely green hills of Vermont. I remember passing through them from Maine when a young bride many years ago. We had just arrived at Portland and were on our way to Toronto and Niagara Falls. I recollect quite well remarking how much they resembled my own beloved highland hills in Scotland. The writer of the following in the Scottish-American does not give his name, only signs the letter "M," and this is what he says of your beautiful hills and famous old state:—

"There is no place on the American continent that reminds a Scot of his dear old Caledonia more than the hills of Vermont. Nor am I alone in this opinion, as it has been expressed time and again by many genuine natives of the land of the mountain and the flood, who traveled over these hills. As one looks over the broad sweep of rolling hills and luxuriant valleys, the beautiful homes and well-kept farms, not to speak of the industry and care displayed in the orchards and gardens, we do not wonder that Scotsmen became the early settlers of 'The Green Mountain state,' and named one of the leading counties Caledonia. During the month of August, it was my good fortune to spend my vacation in Vermont. The weather was charming, and the tourist was everywhere in evidence, many of them coming from every part of the union. The warm sunshine and soft breezes which God intended man should sniff into his nostrils and prepare him for the more vigorous life of the city aided him in the relaxation while going from city to country."

"In 1790, a settlement was effected between Vermont and New Hampshire, and in 1791 Vermont was admitted into the union. At the present moment there is said to be something like 12,000 Scotsmen and their families in this state alone. They are located at Barre, South Ryegate and Hardwick, and are engaged in the granite business. Some of these enterprising Scots settled in the granite towns more than thirty years ago, and by frugal living and industrious habits, many of them became rich. At present nearly all the quarry and shed owners are Scotch or sons of Scotchmen, and some of the workers in the quarries and sheds are also natives of Scotia. These Scots as a rule are industrious and sober and after a time are able to lay by a penny for a rainy day."

"A large number of the stone cutters hail from Aberdeen, the granite city of Scotland. Those who are single return home about Christmas time with a good bag 'o' silver for their mothers and sweethearts. These Aberdeen Scots are great savers. It seems that industry and frugality are born in them."

"But Barre hereafter will not be noted so much for its granite hills, but for its elegant statue of that prince of Scotsmen, Robert Burns, which stands at the corner of Washington street, in front of the high school, designed by Barclay Brothers and one of the finest in America. The elder Barclay, now deceased, who was an enterprising Scot, executed the work in a manner that gave entire satisfaction to the whole community. I cannot close this article without saying a word about the New England meetinghouse which for two centuries has been one of the outstanding features of the landscape."

"The New church of the Pilgrims is the Congregational. Almost every village is noted for its white-painted meetinghouse and towering spire. The people of Vermont are a religious people, noted for their simple habits, conservative and believers in the teachings of the old Bible."

"For many years all of these churches have sent forth streams of blessing into all of our large cities. They were men of integrity and renown, lawyers, ministers, physicians and surgeons, statesmen and business men in general, and became mighty in the history of this nation."

"I am proud of this fine tribute to Vermont and to the sons of Scotland who made it their home. I would like to remind 'M.' though, that the Barre statue of Robert Burns is not only, as he says, 'one of the finest in America,' but the very finest, and the only granite statue of him in the whole world."

"The elder Barclay, now deceased, who was an enterprising Scot, executed the work in a manner that gave entire satisfaction to the whole community. I cannot close this article without saying a word about the New England meetinghouse which for two centuries has been one of the outstanding features of the landscape."
